POT LUCK THIS MEETING Dinner line forms at 6:30

President's Message Joe Dobrowolski

The January meeting was a both a tour and a meeting. Tim Carmichael and Carmel Comstock, the owners of the Straith House graciously opened their house for a tour by our members. The house is in wonderful shape and it was a singular experience for our members. After the tour we convened at the Club House for desserts and the normal meeting. Changes to the By-Laws were adopted.

In April we will have a talk on the Nisenan native peoples by Sheri Tatsch, PhD, a Nisenan expert who has taught at UC Davis, and Shelly Covert a Nisenan tribal leader from Nevada City. This will be a very interesting and exciting presentation.

DONATION: Carole Brewer, June Melvin's daughter, went through June's collections and memories. Carole collected several boxes of photos, books, event programs and a variety of historical items related to Fair Oaks and has donated them to the Society. We appreciate receiving these personal items of June's. June who died in 2010 was a founder and leader of the Fair Oaks Historical Society for decades. Below is a little bit of the Society's history in June's own words.

FOUNDING THE FAIR OAKS HISTORICAL SOCIETY by June Melvin

It was always a mystery to June, being a history student for many years, why it was that Fair Oaks did not have a Historical Society. In 1969, when June was named California History and Landmarks Chairman for The Woman's Thursday Club of Fair Oaks, she arranged a Sunday afternoon silver tea in our local library in the hope of stimulating community interest in forming a local society. It was a beautiful affair, well attended with our Legislators and State CFWC History and Landmarks Chairman in attendance. Everyone seemed to appreciate the gathering but it ended there. She sought out and purchased a store display cabinet for historical exhibits and it was placed in the library, where it remained for quite a while.

In 1975, Mrs. Melvin scheduled an evening Section of The Woman's Thursday Club, well attended including: (1) J. W. Pugh, Manager of the local Crocker Bank and local Historian, (2) Mrs. Vivian Archer, author of a paper on Fair Oaks History, and (3) Mrs. Alice Jewett, from Davis, California, Region Director of the Conference of California Historical Societies. These people expressed interest in organizing a local Society but no one would take an office. Mrs. Melvin, was heavily occupied with the office of District President of the CFWC, so it was a young lady, Sue Roark, employed in the office of the local Park District that arranged for the Park District to sponsor a local historical society. Harry Voth was elected the first president, and held the office for three months. Then Mrs. Roark took the office, which she chaired for three years. There was a lapse of time when no meetings were held. Alfred McKenzie, local attorney, called meetings for a year and a half. The Society struggled to stay alive, having from five to ten people in attendance each time. June Melvin, now free from other obligations, was elected President, wrote a complete new set of By-laws, changing the meetings from monthly to quarterly and developed a pot-luck dinner agenda.

It has proven greatly successful with the average attendance of between 60 and 80 people. Mrs. Melvin held office for three years and the Fair Oaks Society has matured into a solid, strong, and positive influence in the community - pledged to preserve Fair Oaks history and heritage; to protect its future identity and work to bring about the temporary History Center, a repository for documents and memorabilia, and in time to be developed into a permanent location.

PS: And here we are today carrying out the prescient vision of June Melvin

Fair Oaks' Native Flora by Ashton Smith

Fair Oaks' wild, native plants have been much appreciated by countless generations for their practical uses and for their diversity and mysterious beauty. Fair Oaks in the 1890s was described as a "natural park". Early resident of Fair Oaks, Grant Vail Wallace, who grew up in an 1890s described the area as having a "veritable botanical garden..." forming the most interesting and diversified native flora of which I know". The Native American Maidu Tribe or more locally, Nisenan, have and still utilize locally native plants for many practical purposes. For example, five Fair Oaks' fern species are used for basketry. Some species include: Bracken Fern (Pteridium aquilinum), California Maiden-Hair Fern (Adiantum jordanii), Coffee Fern (Pellaea andromedifolia) and the magnificent Western Chain Fern- (Woodwardia fimbriata), which produces stunning 5-9ft fronds.

Lily family species include Soap roots and "Indian potatoes". The "Indian potatoes" include species like Blue Dicks (Dichelostemma capitatum), Ithuriel's Spear (Triteleia laxa), and the late spring Brodiaea sp. The Indian Potatoe's starchy corms (underground stems) are eaten raw or cooked. Soap Root (Chlorogalum pomeridianum), consists of an underground bulb which is crushed up, and is used to stun fish, with ease, to help to catching fish for eating. It is also used as soap lather. Soap Root brushes are made up of the coarse fibers that surround the bulb.

On these balmy spring days, one can still find, among the rolling blue oak studded hills of eastern Sailor Bar, cool shaded canyon slopes graced with ferns, Interior Live Oaks and Western Red Buds. High and dry hilltops are adorned with Blue Dicks, Ithuriel's Spears, Soap Roots, Blue Oaks and countless other woodland species that truly make Fair Oaks a "diverse botanical garden".

Clean Up At the History Center

On February 25th a few hardy souls, Warren Blomquist, Bob Vogel, Vicki Walter and Joe Dobrowolski turned out to trim the Wisteria, and side oak tree and clean up the flower beds. Warren single handedly took out many of the chicken perches in the oak tree. The walk is now much cleaner. The group also hung the old barbershop sign. The sign, donated to the FOHS in 1999, was found in the attic at the cemetery district by Digger. It's now proudly hanging on the side of the History Center.
